TITLE: Prophetic Literature

TERM:20109 (September 2010)

PROFESSOR: Shawn W. Flynn

COURSE DESCRIPTION:

This course will explore the prophets of Israel from their historical contexts, identify distinct types of prophecy present in the Hebrew Bible/Old Testament, explore the development of prophecy as a phenomena and genre and identify major theological themes present in the prophets like the presence/absence of God, the role of sin, and differing versions of restoration. Attention will be paid to Israelite prophets' relation to similar/different ancient Near Eastern figures and the prophetic contributions to Israelite expressions of God (particularly shifts from polytheism to monotheism). Basic methods of exegesis will be reinforced and attention paid to a Catholic framework for interpreting scripture as understood from Church documents.

CLASS OBJECTIVES:

After careful attention to readings and assignments the student should be able to:

- Understand the historical contexts of prophetic books and their significance for interpretation.
- Have a basic understanding of different stages of prophetic expression in Israelite history.
- Articulate the major theological themes of various prophetic books.
- Have a sense and some competence in exegetical method and its associated tools related to the prophetic corpus.
- Be able to apply the results of exegesis to faith and articulating the faith in various preaching ministries.
